

02-21-19

HEADLINES

Charlie Poet

Cajun Pedophiles

SWAMPS TEEMING WITH SATANIST PEDOPHILES IN THE DIRTY SOUTH

Vatican summit on sexual abuse has its roots in Cajun country

Catholic Church ignored 1985 report warning of child sex abuse crisis

Maybe the Saints keep losing in God-like epic ways because evil lurks in the heart of New Orleans, and perhaps all of Louisiana.

In 2005 in Livingston, LA, a pastor walked into the police station and floored the detective with his horrifying confession of satanic rituals in his church including abusing babies in black dresses while laying in pentagrams and much more.

Now cajun country is back in the pedophile news with what has become:

“the church’s biggest challenge since Reformation in the 16th century – setting the stage for a historic religious summit at the Vatican that begins Thursday (Feb. 21).”

With one of the world’s oldest and most powerful institutions now groaning under the weight of a heightening clergy abuse scandal, Pope Francis is attempting to get his arms around the crisis by summoning bishops from around the globe to Rome, 5,500 miles and a cultural world apart from the tiny Acadiana community where Gauthé became “patient zero” in Roman Catholicism’s plague of abuse.

For much of the past three-and-a-half decades since Gauthé’s crimes were exposed, the Catholic hierarchy has bobbed and weaved its way through a barrage of sex abuse complaints highlighted by blockbuster revelations in Boston in 2002 and in Pennsylvania last year. Those reports of abuse finally prompted church leaders to take tangible steps to address the deep-seated sins that some believe span much of the church’s long history.

But Mouton and a few others within the church recognized Gauthé not as an anomaly, but as the first of what they feared would be a wave of abuse cases. They wrote so in an internal report in the mid-1980s, warning church hierarchy that the crisis likely involved hundreds of pedophile priests and could cost the church $1 billion in judgments.

It’s clear some saints belong in prison, Louisiana, turn the rest of your “saints” in now, maybe God will let you win the Super Bowl! (Read More)

